Q: In php, how to find if a string is an exact match of a pattern? In php how can I find out if a string is exactly equal to a regex pattern like so: `$str = "abc"; if(startsWith($str, 'abc')) { //true } ?` I have a single string and I want to see if it begins with the pattern. A: I would rather use `preg_match` which does this and much more: `if(preg_match('/abc/', $str)) { //true }` A: Regex will probably be fastest and most reliable `preg_match('/abc/', $str)` For further information, see @dystroy's comment. Ed, I apologize for the delay, but I had to spend a day or two in London before returning to Houston. I shall be in contact with you shortly. I have been slowly checking emails and voicemail. I have not had a chance to go through everything. It seems to me that both of us need to agree on the approach. We agree on the approach, but we need to agree on the definition of "break" and "broke". I think that we need to agree on those definitions before we start defining and computing NPV. Thanks for the summary. I think that Steve wanted us to coordinate or agree on the definition of broke and break before we start working on the exercise. I am also still unclear about what we are actually valuing in this exercise - it could be P/L, NPV or some other measure of value. We need to define these up front. On another matter, I heard from Andy that the treasury contact person has had to return to Houston and may be in London in the near

Effect of chemotherapy on the activity of liver folate-dependent enzymes in patients with advanced ovarian cancer. The effect of chemotherapy with the anticancer agent cis-diammine-dichloroplatinum on the activity of thymidylate synthetase (TS), dihydrofolate reductase (DHFR) and the low folate-requiring glycinamide ribonucleotide formyltransferase (GARFT) was studied in the liver of patients with advanced ovarian cancer. Pretreatment and post-treatment values for these three enzymes were compared to a group of normal control subjects. Pretreatment TS activity in five of seven patients (71%) were below that of the normal group, whereas all seven patients were over the normal DHFR activity. Pretreatment GARFT activity was found to be normal in all seven patients. Following treatment with cis-diammine-dichloroplatinum (24 mg/m² IV) all seven patients had a decrease in TS activity at 24 and 48 h. There was no change in DHFR activity over time. During treatment with cyclophosphamide, vincristine and methotrexate, TS activity declined and was below the normal value in three of five patients. There was no change in the post-treatment DHFR activity. Thus, in patients with advanced ovarian cancer pretreatment TS activity may be low, which may not reflect the actual level of TS activity in the liver. Intratumoral cytotoxic drug concentrations may be an important contributing factor to this low TS activity. Raised central plasma cortisol concentrations in diabetic mellitus. Ten healthy young normal subjects, eight noninsulin-dependent (NIDDM) diabetic subjects and ten nondiabetic subjects received a modified insulin tolerance test, with control of serum levels of epinephrine, norepinephrine, and cortisol, and simultaneous blood sampling for glucose and insulin for 120 min. The control group and diabetic patients had significantly (P less than 0.001) higher cortisol levels from 45 to 120 min, but no significant difference was observed between the two groups. In contrast, the NIDDM group had significantly (P less than 0.005) higher norepinephrine levels than the control group (219 +/- 45 vs. 58 +/- 9 ng/ml, respectively). Of the eight NIDDM subjects, 4 had cortisol levels over 460 nmol/l throughout the test, and in these subjects, glucose and norepinephrine showed a normal physiological fall during
