This is a recipe for delicious, creamy pork and lentil soup! I've included some tips and tricks on how to make it extra flavoursome and smooth. Serve it with a generous drizzle of feta or tahini sauce for a tasty treat. This soup goes really well with a crunchy, light salad, too. Photography Credit: Sally Vargas There's only one recipe for this soup on The Gluten-Free Homemaker, and it's inspired by a recipe from my friend Sarah. Sarah made this soup on a snowy, bitter day last winter and it became one of our all-time favorites. I like to make a big batch of this soup so that I can have some warm and hearty on blustery days for weeks and weeks. It's one of those things that I always crave. I use brown lentils for this recipe as they aren't the mushy, spoonable kind of lentil that comes in the can. Instead, they have a satisfying bite and the split red lentils make them taste even more spring-like. Our Favorite Videos Get Recipe » Tips for Extra Flavour Cooking the lentils with the pork gives it even more flavor. One trick I learned when making this is that you can "break down" the pork by cooking it until it is almost fall-apart tender. If you do this, you'll get a lot of flavour into the pork and it will also get easier to puree. Like I said, using brown lentils means that they are a bit firmer and will hold their shape when pureed. I find that if you cook the lentils separately, they just tend to dissolve in the soup. Also, the smoky flavor of the pork and lentils comes from the external grill that I use. I've also tried baking and roasting the pork indoors with mixed results. This method is really only necessary if you don't have an external grill, though. Want More? You can use up to two cups of dried black beans in place of the lentils in this soup. Feel free to substitute red beans or green lentils. If you're not a big fan of lentils or pork, just leave these out of this recipe. Related Articles More Great Soup Recipes Gazpacho is a cold

Hyla argenteovirens Hyla argenteovirens, the Argentinian gray treefrog, is a species of frog in the family Hylidae. It is endemic to Argentina. It occurs in the provinces of Chubut, Santa Cruz, and Tierra del Fuego. Its natural habitats are temperate shrubland and temperate grassland. Sources Rödel M-O, Kellner B & Violle G. 2004. Hyla argenteovirens. 2006 IUCN Red List of Threatened Species. Downloaded on 21 July 2007. Category:Hyla Category:Amphibians of Argentina Category:Endemic fauna of Argentina Category:Taxonomy articles created by Polbot Category:Amphibians described in 1875The present invention relates to an automatic image forming apparatus of the type in which a sheet is fed from an automatic document feeder and, more particularly, to a sheet detection apparatus for automatically detecting the presence or absence of a sheet in the automatic document feeder. Automatic document feeders are used for feeding sheets of paper from a stacker. The automatic document feeder is connected to a document reader (commonly referred to as the scanner), and the document reader reads information written on the documents stored in the automatic document feeder, converts the read information into image signals and prints the image on a sheet of paper. An automatic document feeder must be provided with a sheet detection apparatus so that the supply of sheets of paper can be started when the automatic document feeder is put into operation. The sheet detection apparatus detects if a sheet of paper is present in the automatic document feeder, and if it is determined that no sheet of paper is present, the automatic document feeder is switched to a standby condition. A variety of detection methods are known for detecting the presence of sheets of paper in a sheet-feeding device. One method is to open a shutter between a paper feed roller and a pickup roller to provide a gap, and to detect whether a sheet of paper is present by the presence or absence of shadows projected by the paper at the gap. Another method is to use a photo-interrupter to detect the presence of a sheet of paper. While such detection methods are used in an automatic document feeder, there are also known apparatuses which are capable of detecting the absence of sheets of paper during the feeding of only one sheet
