I have a simple scheme in mind. Use JASPIC to open a chain that first authenticates with Apache, and if successful, then continue on to weblogic, using the username and password obtained from Apache. My question is how do I implement this scheme, is it possible to use JASPIC to apply the authentication to Apache and weblogic at the same time? A: JASPIC - Easy JSP/Servlet Security (weblogic) I would suggest using the security policy from the server being used. That way you know that you are only depending on the server being used, not your implementation. You should be able to use the JAAS file from weblogic server and define the Subject as you would for a generic application. The security policy can be a bit more complicated, it has to be able to handle the wildcard domains and allow the users to select an allowed domain. I think that would be the best approach. Alternatives I have never used it, but you might also be able to turn on some of the weblogic domain logging to see which users are trying to log in, and use the request parameter to pass the domain name.
