I have several of these in my computer. Several months ago I was using a blue "fox" file. It ran for several months, and then lost its ability to start. Then I have others that are blank DOS floppy disks (white "circle-Windows" type disk), other than they are blank and have no file name of any kind. I tried to load them in explorer, but they weren't loaded because they don't have any file name. They are not corrupt. I can not open them in any kind of data management program. They look to be in a format that DOS doesn't know. I can't get "disk" to load the disk and scan it to see what is on it. Am I correct in thinking that I've been granted a treasure chest of inexpensive historical items? Am I out of luck? What the hell am I missing here?

A: I don't want to copy-paste you reams of text, but to give you the short version, It is emulating a floppy disk, this may be a program or the disk may be damaged It is too difficult to find out, you are probably better of just borrowing the floppy from someone with the disk still attached to it You might be able to load an image of it and then recover data from that *Turmeric is an anti-inflammatory spice.

*Turmeric is an anti-inflammatory spice. *Turmeric is an anti-inflammatory spice. This spice is touted as the “king of all herbs” and has been used in Chinese medicine for thousands of years. It can be used to brighten skin, to naturally whiten and help with dark circles and inflammation, and even to fight cancer. Here are 4 amazing benefits of turmeric that I can personally attest to: 1) Turmeric Can Make Your Skin Glow I've tried a number of natural skin glow and wrinkle products (my skin is deep with freckles!), and two products consistently came out on top: the L'Oreal Just Brows Anti-Aging Eye Enhancer and the Neutrogena Rapid Wrinkle Repair. Both contain turmeric. The L'Oreal is a clear gel that sits on top of your natural skin tone. It's easy to apply, and I've even found that I can apply more if needed. It leaves a natural color behind, although I've found that d0c515b9f4
